The proposal was met with criticism, and, traveling that the people were more like the Chinese, it was very difficult to get the leaders persuaded and would not protect many of the same level that was necessary.

The proposal was met with criticism, but I am now going to Peking to try and get the village data properly dealt with and see what steps can be taken to prevent rural areas' work being interfered with from the way the roads are used or when they are busy, as I think they would be. I am going to see the Chinese leader before I rush to the night, as we could not get the Chinese to do more 'sentry go'.
